POV: You've just checked into a hotel. You get your room key, swipe the card at your door, and step foot inside your home away from home. What's the first thing you do?

Perhaps you pull back the curtains to take in the view. Or if rest is the ultimate Rx after a long day of travel, maybe you flop down onto the bed to feel how soft it is. Perhaps you go right to the mini bar to see what you could be serving up? Those are all features worth checking out, but you'll first find me touring the bathroom.

True, we spend much more time in the living area of a hotel room than the bathroom. But there's something about a dreamy and spacious shower, jacuzzi, and robe that feel so luxurious. Plus, a tiny bathroom with a lukewarm shower and scratchy towels can make even the best hotels feel wearisome rather than wonderful.

In case you, too, are in the mood for a soothing spa escape—or are renovating your bathroom sometime soon—we're giving you an exclusive peek inside some of the most breathtaking bathrooms inside hotels around the globe.

With Camelback Mountain in view, there's no better seat in the house at Sanctuary Camelback Mountain, A Gurney's Resort & Spa than in the Spa Suite's outdoor soaking tub. After sunset, when the peak falls out of view, guests can stare up at the stars from that bath or its nearby patio shower. For those not in the mood for an al fresco soak, large windows still let in plenty of the serene desert ambiance, and inside, there's a tub and shower stocked with Salt & Stone bath products, as well as plenty of plush towels and robes.
